1. Dictionaries, Polyglot. I. Simon, Zoltan, 1949-

INSTEAD OF FOREWORD

The Spanish Jesuit linguist Lorenzo Hervás y Panduro (1735-1809) published his Vocabulario poligloto in 1787. It contained over 150 languages, but usually only a few sample words.

Our polyglot dictionary follows his approach in the computer age. The instant author, or rather compiler, Zoltan Andrew Simon, began to plan a similar exercise about 1985. In those days he had a computer, but he was quite unfamiliar with it. In 1991, he completed an AutoCAD course and was still pondering how his polyglot dictionary should look like. He tried to do it by AutoCAD, but it did not work out. He preferred Word, but he did not know how to use the tabulator or to design columns. He anticipated that the completion of a 116-language dictionary may take him three decades or so. In those days he often had to live alone for years, so he started the undertaking as a hobby. The hardest part was to take home large bags filled with various dictionaries, sometimes in pouring rain or falling snow, from the libraries.

One can compile a wish list of “ideal” words, including rainbow, waterfall, spiderweb, footprint, shadow, or the numerals from one to ten. However, sometimes these are missing in the vocabularies.

Contrary to his expectations, the dictionary was complete in 1998 in its present form, except the instant introduction. Although the original Word files still exist, most of them cannot be open by computer anymore. Therefore, the most reasonable choice was to scan the printed pages. Since 1998, perhaps ten copies of it have been sold. The author has never found a distributor. Publishers specialized in dictionaries seemed uninterested. They may have worried that a 116-language polyglot dictionary on the market could reduce the sales of their other dictionaries.

The dictionary has several shortcomings because its compiler is not a professional linguist. After the completion it became obvious that two languages listed – Malay and Indonesian – are the same. One may argue that the Inuit or Innu dialects are independent languages. Several word forms are listed under the Aboriginal languages of Australia, in a combined form. Strictly speaking, each of them should have been listed as a separate language. It is often hard, if not impossible, to separate dialects from languages. Linguists say that “language” is a dialect with an army. We may refer to Spanish or Portugal, and recently Russian and Ukrainian in this regard. Once I have found a linguistic journal in a UBC library, the University of British Columbia. It contained a description of the Aboriginal languages of Australia. The paper referred to a certain “Parakeet Burlong”, meaning the cave of the Parakeet. The Australian parakeet is a type of small parrot native to that country. The Aboriginal word “burlong” corresponds to “barlang” in Magyar. Considering that in English transcription “u” usually sounds like a short “a”, and the Hungarian sound for “a” is between the English “a” and “o” (like in the words “wash” or “all”), some Aborigines and Hungarians called a “cave” by a completely identical word. Since caves do not issue any sound, the word “burlong” cannot have an onomatopoeic origin. This word has triggered my ambitious project.

Finally, I wanted to choose pairs from the 43 Philippine minor Languages of Professor Lawrence A. Reid, by combining closely related languages. I made a preliminary comparison and arbitrarily formed ten pairs of them, following the numbering system of Professor Reid. See “Philippine minor Languages: Word lists and phonologies” in Oceanic Linguistics Special Publication No. 8. (Honolulu: University of Hawai‘i Press, 1971.) In 2001, I had more time to evaluate the degrees of lexical similarity of these minor languages, based on 100+100 words. Then I realized that some of the pairs were not the best matches.

Some of the North American Indian nations had contacts with the ancestors of the Turks, Mongolians, and Hungarians before they have departed from Asia. A single word does not mean much, but I have no difficulty to associate a Hungarian dialectal form for “csipkerózsa” meaning “rosehip,” namely “hecsedli” with the Nahuatl “xochitl” (“flower” or “rose”), “négy” (the numeral “four”) with the Cree “neyo,” the Delaware “neewa,” the Ojibwe “niwo,” the Micmac “neggwel,” or the Swahili “nne.” One of the North American nations - perhaps the Mohawks - used almost the same word for “heron” as the Hungarians did. We may collate the Japanese word “teriyaki” with the Turkish “tereyagi” (“butter”). Let alone that the long word for “butterfly” in the Turkish language has its almost identical counterparts in some of the forty-three minor Philippine languages. The Turks of modern Turkey originated from the east and the ancestors of those Philippine nations once lived in the west, on the Asian continent. Thus, their early contact thousands of years ago is not an impossibility.

After all, if independent researchers would compare the lexical similarities between two small languages spoken at opposite points of the globe, the “scientific” linguists would always ridicule or attack their results as mere coincidence. After the completion of my polyglot dictionary, I have found that 50+ notions in the Philippine minor languages show high correlation with their Baltic (Latvian and Lithuanian) counterparts. An average linguist in our days would declare beforehand that such comparison is unscientific. By such predetermination, they lock themselves up into a limited space, not observing the real outside world. Many modern linguists remind me to squirrels in a zoo that run laboriously inside a small cylinder that keeps rotating, without any visible progress.

The Aztec “papaloa,” the French “papillon,” the Irish “feileacan” and the Hungarian “pillangó” can be cognates. Finding many similar “cognates” in the Cocopa and the Cheke Holo languages was quite surprising for me. (I use quotation marks because cognates supposedly cannot exist in a pair of unrelated languages. But who can be certain that none of the ancient components of these two nations have ever been related somehow?) Geographically speaking, the Cocopa is North American, and the Cheke Holo is Melanesian. Here we list a few words from these two languages, respectively: yawar – kabre; lysuly – lise; kwlyap – glaulapu; man – funu; wat – fada [vet in Hungarian, bota in Spanish, related to vote in English]; ‘am’i – kmo’e; ‘aya – gaiju [gally in Hungarian, galho in Portuguese: “branch,” not “tree”]; wi – filo; pa – pala; xir – haru; xasany – ga’ase [kiz in Turkish, xa-si’i in Mixtec, goce in Albanian]; qwas – kmusa; cuwar – snamore; (ny)kw’al – guli; xyay – khujo; kwi – khoveo; kwrap – khabru; kwar – ukro [ochre ?]; walish – blau; kamot – khumara; shma – hume; -pi – fei [felé in Hungarian, towards in English]; xawily – kholo [gol in Turkish]; wa’i – fa-...; nya – na-... [nap in Hungarian, just like in a Melanesian language]; coyer – gore; nyak – nathu’i; nyak – khoga; pus – khusi; klyak-lyak – legu-lahu; skwis – gusna [quest in English]; piw’i – bi’o [big in English]; finally xany – thono.

Hungarian is not a uniform language. It has several dialectal components, often with different roots that could be separated somehow. Of course, this shall include the evaluation of thousands of our old books and documents, so their dialects could be identified with their modern remnants. In general, a simple language should not have two different words for notions like dog, bone, sky (heaven), star, air, song, or the verbs finds and cuts. The Hungarians do (or did) have those duplicates or triplicates for them: kutya or eb; csont or tetem; ég or menny; csillag or húgy; levegő, lég or ájer; ének or dal; talál, lel or kap; and vág, metesz, szel or szeg, accordingly. In 1983, Vancouver, I authored a paper entitled “The 38 Hungarian dialects in the Carpathian Basin – The world’s first complex dialect map by computer.” In September 2003, the “Journal of Language and Linguistics” (ISSN 1475-8989), Volume 2 Issue 2, pages 323-359, published my paper entitled “Origin and Remnants of the Dialects in England.” In 2001, I completed a paper about a proposed new classification of the 43 Philippine minor languages. Now it is uploaded on the Internet (Academia.edu and ResearchGate). It does not differ significantly from the existing classification, except that it has based on 100+100 words taken from Prof. Lawrence Reid’s related book and word lists (1971).

As for the origin of the 38 Hungarian dialects, probably many of them had ancient, so-called “Finno-Ugrian” origin. (We must use this definition, although we are not certain that this artificial classification makes any sense for our research. Simply, compound languages cannot be classified or squeezed into a particular drawer. Morris Swadesh overlooked the fact that the major languages are usually compound, so his glottochronology proposal cannot work for them.) Whatever the case may be, a few Hungarian dialects may have been the remote relatives of the Finnish or Estonian language, but not most of them. Using the 8% threshold of Swadesh for the Finno-Ugrian languages, this sensitive indicator shows that something is wrong. The Finnish-Hungarian lexical similarity is ca. 5%, the Finnish-English is 16%, the Estonian-English is 15.1%, and the Finnish-Estonian is 68.1%.

The Magyar dialects show a wide variety, indicating relations with other languages. An example is the word “spark.” The notion shall be widened: a little hot and burning thing coming out from a fire. Four variants are the most typical: szikra [see Slavic “izkra”]; sziporka [see English “spark,” its verb is “sziporkáz”=“sparks.” The Hungarians do not like several consonants without vowels, like the Slovak “zmrzlina” that is, “ice cream”]; parázs [as the Spanish “brasa,” a live coal that does not fly out]. Finally, pernye or pörnye [maybe related to “burnt”] that is flying out from the fire, but it is not red-hot anymore, rather like ashes. It is intriguing that the Magyar notion (unszol and noszogat or nosza!) for “to urge” has German (“uns”) and Portuguese (“nossa”) parallels, both for urging a group that “now it is our turn!” Two Magyar dialects call a red-black flat bug as “the little cow of (little) God.” It is “bozh’ya korovka” in Russian, “vaquilla de Dios” in Spanish, and “la vache de la Vierge” in French. Also refer to Lord (1971: 217). Also, the Magyars have over 100 (often slightly different) dialectal forms for the sunflower, so their language is not “monolithic” as Sir John Browning claimed. It does not mean either that all the four forms of the “spark” are recent borrowings from other European languages. We have a natural inclination to accept many words as new borrowings if we cannot find them in our Latin dictionary. A sample for this situation is a Magyar variant for “anchor,” called “vas+macska” (“iron+cat”). The Magyars have not been famous mariners, so once I thought that the funny name was just a new slang. I was the most surprised when it stuck my eyes in the dictionary of Vrančić, printed in 1595. Thus, four centuries ago, half of the Hungarians called it “horgony” and in the other half of the country it was “vasmacska.” We mentioned the Slavic word “zmrzlina” above. For comparison, the verb “to turn” is “auaua’i” in Samoa. Some languages like many consonants, while others prefer vowels. The skeletons of the best cognates are based on consonants. We can find a Magyar word “vastag” in the North American Micmac language as “pasteg,” in its original archaic form. Both mean “thick” in English. The ancestors of the Micmac tribe must have separated from the ancestors of the Magyars several millennia ago. Even recorded “evidence” for an extinct language can be unreliable. Priscus Rhetor wrote that the Hun language used the word “strava” for lamentations when they mourned King Attila. See Otto Maenchen-Helfen, The Language of the Huns. One may wonder that the word “strava” was the modern Serbian word “zdravo” – a general greeting. Attila surrounded himself with Serbian guards and servants.

Once I started to study the Egyptian language, of which a linguist wrote, “a typical African language.” Soon I was able to mark down dozens of Egyptian words that had counterparts in Spanish, English, German, or Hungarian. How can a typical African language be a mixture of European languages? As for the Magyar part, I was glad to find a common source for my word “mortar” and “sadness” in Old Egyptian. The latter is “buban” in Egyptian, and “búbánat” in Magyar, clearly a compound word from the roots “bú” and “bán,” both meaning sadness, pain, or remorse. Thus, my earlier opinion that this word was only 1100 years old in my language, as a combination of Magyar and Kabar words, became invalid. The combined form had existed millennia ago in the Egyptian language, due to coincidence or early contact.

The notions of “red” and “dragon” seem related (see the Baltic languages and Revelation of John), or “seven” and “head” are related (seven cities, seven heads of the dragon, or seven stars). The OE heafod, the German Haupt, the Latin sept, the Greek hepta, the English head and the Hungarian hét (7) could belong to the same root. The notions of “blood” and “truth” (or “true”) show something in common in many languages of the world. The Welsh “gonest” [see “honest”] and “gwir” coupled with the Finno-Ugrian “ver,” with the Spanish “vero,” and the English “very.” Or, the Tibetan “traa,” the Fijian “dra,” the Malay-Philippine “dara(h),” the Kikuyu “tharigi,” the Sinhalese “haba” and the Tolo (Melanesian) “habu,” the Mungkan “kan-kanam” and the Turkish “kan,” the Hungarian “igazi” (true, real) and the Zulu “igazi” (blood). A letter by letter, or, sound by sound agreement in long words all over the globe, with related meanings is more than strange, particularly between the languages of a Central Asian and a Southwestern African nation. (See “igazi” in “Wiktionary”: in the Zulu, Xhosa and Northern Ndebele languages in Africa.) Let alone that an archaic Hungarian word, “ingovány” for “swamp” exists with the same meaning and in the same form (“inkovane”) in a major African language (probably in Zulu or Kikuyu, I do not have those notes anymore). Another African language has the Magyar word “szakadék” for “ravine,” in almost identical form. I was not surprised to find the Magyar words for “avalanche” and “queen” in the Lithuanian language, for that can be late historical contact under the same queen. Africa is different. Yet, it is unlikely that an African tribe would have borrowed words for ravine or swamp from a Hungarian hunter or discoverer (like László Magyar who lived in Angola and married a daughter of a tribal chief 150 years ago). Antonio Pigafetta, in Magellan’s expedition, recorded some Patagonian words. The ones for nose [or, orr] and fingernails [colim, köröm] are similar in Patagonian and Hungarian. A few identical words exist in Hungarian and Sanskrit for pillow (párna, originating from the Sanskrit prnāti=“fill”) and wolf (prakasha, farkas, the animal with tail). Certain Eurasian languages have identical or similar words in Sanskrit. It is interesting that the Hungarian, a result of a fusion between 7 or 10 tribes eleven centuries ago, has three words for a “bite”: kutya-harapás, kígyó-marás és szúnyog-csípés. The English language is more monolithic, where dogs, snakes, and mosquitoes all “bite.”

There is a mystery of the Japanese word “arigato.” It clearly reminds us to the Portuguese “obrigado” (“thank you” in English). The Portuguese were the first Europeans in Japan, and perhaps the Japanese people adopted their greetings. A Japanese linguist could answer this question, by finding the earliest occurrence of the word “arigato” in their literature. Since the Japanese pays extreme attention to proper greetings, addressing and ranks, I have difficulty to accept it as a recent Japanese borrowing. An additional detail is that the Japanese word “katana” (a famous type of sword) exists in Hungarian as “katona,” meaning a soldier or swordsman. (The Hungarian word for sword is “kard” that comes from a Persian word for “knife.”) Let us note here that the North American Ojibwe language calls the blood “misque.” Therefore, the English word “mosquito” may have its root in America [please do not ask me how], or at least a relative. (Maybe the Latin “musca” originally referred to a blood-sucking species of flies in an ancient place of contact.) A last observation refers to the close relationship between the notions of “eye” and “face.” If you associate these two, you get huge areas covered with the corresponding cognates, stretching over oceans without explanation, except if you give an allowance for the diffusionists. (We do not refer to the story about the Tower of Babel when the nations first realized the differences of their languages.) Our instant polyglot dictionary is aiming to form clusters of related notions like sun, day, today, yesterday, and tomorrow. Sky and egg seem to relate to each other, just like the colours yellow, green, and blue. Wood, tree, and tribe are in one group. Night and north are associated, just like heart with colour.

It appears to me that there is a sharp line that amateur linguists must cross to become a professional linguist. Namely, they must accept, by faith, that grammar, phonology, syntax, tenses, genders, or word sequence always form the basis of classification of a language. They must deny the importance of the vernacular or the basic words of that language. Such arbitrary separation would not fly in Hungary where linguistics as a science served primarily the interests of the oppressors (Austrians and Russians). Linguistics was a political and ideologic tool to demonstrate that the nation had no roots or past: even their words were borrowings from other, often less developed, tribes. The facts contradict such theory because grammar and most linguistic rules are quite recent. Their finalization took place, at least in Hungary, in the 1840's. One cannot seriously claim that, say, common speakers of Spanish in the Middle Ages knew how to use the "pretérito pluscuamperfecto" when they had no simple basic words. Those basic words were not necessarily the same that Swadesh have chosen arbitrarily. A tribe cannot have a grammar, tenses, or genders for its words without having dozens of basic words first. The classification of languages may be based on proper lexicostatistics as a complementary technique, but it can give numerical values, instead of vague or arbitrary assumptions related to grammar and other scientific methods.

There will come an age in linguistics when the collection, collation, and comparison of resembling forms from the basic vocabularies will begin systematically, without watching the continents' limits anxiously. Thus, the German "Schlange," the Hungarian "sallang," and the Philippine "silangan" will finally end up together, side by side. The English words "plot," "blot," "blood" and "flood" will be placed in a single group with the Spanish word "plata" and with the Magyar "fullad;" the English words "bird," "birth," and "burden" will form another group, just like "fright," "flight," "frighten," "afraid" and so on. The notion for "half" or "middle" is associated with "fear" in certain languages. One may explain it with the middle of a river that people had to cross, or a tight-rope walker's fear at midway. Also, the oldest legends of many nations will be explained by linguistics, including the one about a Polynesian fisherman just before the flood whose fishhook got entangled in the beard of a god that was sleeping at the bottom of the sea. (Anchor and anger are quite similar words in English, also horog and harag in Hungarian).

In that coming age, linguists may consider that the German word "schnell" (quick) and the English "snail" are cognates, regardless that snails are extremely slow animals. The ancestors of the speakers of these two languages may have held a snail race where a participant shouted, "Schnell!" ("Faster!"). The English ancestor may have already had a word for fast, quick, or swift, so the word sounding shnell began to refer to the snail. In any case, a day is approaching when linguists will take in consideration common mythological events seen or experienced together by the ancestors of the nations. Minor languages die out in our planet yearly. By that continuing loss, losing a sort of tribal DNA or logic each time, the historical global memory of mankind keeps decreasing irreversibly.

One must remember the world not long ago when 100% mainstream scholars were totally satisfied with the geocentric view. Then, the time of Galileo Galilei and Nicolaus Copernicus brought irreversible changes. The instant author is in a comparable situation, but mainstream linguists would not wish to burn him as they did to Giordano Bruno four centuries ago. Making his efforts ridiculous would be sufficient.

Finally, if you managed to read this introduction and part of the dictionary, you will realize that you are a special and rare person. Even if you dislike the unusual horizontal and vertical layout, your open-minded brain will find interesting issues to start thinking about. So far, those questions have remained unsolved, only "swept under the carpet" by conservative linguists. The author apologizes for having been unable to retype the original issue of 1998, adding accents above words and improve the fonts, or using the optimum ten pairs for the Philippine minor languages. At the age of 73 years, he has no free time to do those improvements, considering that, say, only ten readers may utilize his dictionary during the next decade. He wants to concentrate on his research for the absolute chronology of the ancient world, particularly the Near East with Egypt, Ireland and Scotland, China, and Mexico. Readers that are interested in reading his further works may find a plethora of papers on the Internet (Academia.edu, ResearchGate, and his website at www.correctingworldhistory.com). Thank you for your precious time.

GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF THE LANGUAGES

- WELSH: is spoken in Wales, in the United Kingdom.
 PERSIAN or FARSI: is spoken in Iran.
 ARABIC: in northern Africa and the Near East.
 KURDISH: in Iraq, Turkey and Iran.
 AZERBAIJANI: in Azerbaijan, in the eastern Caucasus.
 TURKISH: in Turkey, in Asia Minor (Anatolia).
 SWAHILI: is spoken in eastern and central Africa.
 HAUSA: is spoken in Niger and northern Nigeria.
 HAWAIIAN: is spoken by the inhabitants of Hawaii.
 MAORI: is spoken by the inhabitants of New Zealand.
 SAMOAN: is the Polynesian language of Samoa.
 HUNGARIAN or MAGYAR: is spoken in the Carpathian Basin.
 BASQUE: in the western Pyrenees in Spain and France.
 GEORGIAN: is spoken in Georgia, on the Black Sea.
 LEZGIAN: is spoken in S.E. Daghestan and N. Azerbaijan.
 MICMAC: in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, P.E.I., & Quebec.
 BLACKFOOT: was formerly widely spoken in Montana, Alberta, and Saskatchewan.
 CREE ("Y"): was formerly spoken in Ontario, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan. The "Y" dialect is spoken in Alberta.
 MOHAWK: was formerly widely spoken between the Mohawk River and the St. Lawrence.
 COMANCHE: was widespread from Wyoming to Texas, their speakers are now living in Oklahoma.
 INUIT/ESKIMO: is a "dialect continuum" extending from the Bering Strait to East Greenland. Our list includes Aleutian cognates as well. (In the editor's opinion, the Inuit is not one language with many dialects but possibly three different ones, with more dialects.)
 JAPANESE: is spoken in Japan.
 OJIBWE/OJEBWAY, also called OJIBWA: was widely spoken in the U.S. and Canada around the Lake Superior.
 PAPAGO and PIMA: their speakers live near the Gila River and Santa Cruz River in southern Arizona.
 YUKI: in California, belongs to the Yukian family.
 PIPIL: is spoken in El Salvador.
 DELAWARE/ALGONQUIN: was formerly spoken in the Delaware River valley. It is also called "Lenape."
 NAVAJO: in parts of New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah.
 COCOPA: in southwestern Arizona, in northern Mexico, the delta of the Colorado River, and near Somerton.
 MIXTEC: Chalcatongo Mixtec near Tlaxiaco, at Oaxaca City.
 TAGALOG: is the official language in the Philippines.
 BIKOL: is a major language of the Philippines.
 ILOKANO: is a major language of the Philippines.
 CROATIAN: in Croatia, in the Balkan Peninsula.
 FIJIAN: in the Fiji Islands, in Melanesia.
 TONGAN: in the Tonga Islands, in Polynesia.
 TAHITIAN: is spoken in Tahiti, in Polynesia.
 MALAY: is the official language in Malaysia.
 INDONESIAN: is the official language in Indonesia.
 GREEK: is the official language of Greece.
 SPANISH: in Spain, in Central and South America.
 POLISH: is the official language in Poland.
 CZECH: is spoken in the Czech Republic.
 BULGARIAN: is the official language in Bulgaria.
 RUSSIAN: is the official language in Russia.
 SWEDISH: spoken in Sweden and in southwestern Finland.
 DANISH: is spoken in Denmark and Greenland.
 NORWEGIAN: is the official language in Norway.
 ICELANDIC: is spoken in Iceland.
 NAGAMESE: is spoken in the far northeast of India.
 ASSAMESE: is spoken in Assam, northeastern India.
 LISU NORTH.: this northern dialect is spoken by most Lisu. The Lisu live in China, Myanmar and Thailand.
 LIMBU: is a Kiranti language in Panchthar, eastern Nepal.
 CHANG: in the Naga Hills district, at Assam and Myanmar.
 BOKAR: is a subtribe of the Adi group of West Siang Dist. Their administrative headquarter is Monigong.
 PUNJABI: the Indic language spoken in Punjab.
 NEPALI: is the official language in Nepal.
 BENGALI: in Bangladesh and West Bengal, India.
 HINDI-URDU: in north. India, Pakistan and Afghanistan.
 GIPSY: is spoken in many European countries. Our word list was collected in Hungary.
 TAMIL: is a Dravidian language in southern India.
 SINHALESE: is spoken in Sri Lanka.
 PORTUGUESE: is spoken in Portugal and Brazil.
 FRENCH: in France, Switzerland, Luxembourg, Belgium.
 CORNISH: in the Cornwall Peninsula, in England.
 IRISH GAELIC: the Goidelic language of Ireland.
 SCOTTISH GAELIC or ERSE: the Gaelic language of the Scottish Highlanders.
 RUMANIAN: is spoken in Romania.
 ITALIAN: is spoken in Italy and Switzerland.
 ALBANIAN: is spoken in Albania and Serbia.
 GERMAN: in Germany, Austria, Switzerland & Luxembourg.
 DUTCH: spoken in the Netherlands and Belgium.
 FINNISH: in Finland, and in Karelia (N.W. Russia).
 ESTONIAN: spoken in Estonia, in the Baltic area.
 LATVIAN or LETTISH: in Latvia, in the Baltic area.
 LITHUANIAN: in Lithuania, in the Baltic region.
 HEBREW: is now spoken by the people of Israel.
 MANDARIN CHINESE: in the People's Republic of China and in Taiwan.
 KOREAN: is spoken in North and South Korea.
 CANTONESE: in the Guangdong province of S. China.
 HOKKIEN: in China's Fujian province and in Taiwan.
 BURMESE: is the official language of Myanmar.
 THAI: is spoken in Thailand (Siam).
 LAO: is spoken in Laos.
 CAMBODIAN or KAMPUCHEAN: is spoken in Kampuchea.
 VIETNAMESE: is spoken in Vietnam.
 ABORIGINAL: dialects spoken near the Murray - Murrumbidgee River area, in Victoria, Australia.
 WIK-MUNGKAN ("Speech Mungkan"): in Australia's western York Peninsula, near Aurukun.
 KILIVILA: in Papua and New Guinea: at Milne Bay, Trobriand and Lucancy Islands, Kiriwina Island.
 CHEKE HOLO ("Speech Holo") or MARINGE/HOGRANO: Meringe area of Santa Isabel Island, Melanesia.
 TOLO: along the S.W. coast of Guadalcanal, Melanesia.
 ZULU: the Bantu language of Natal, South Africa.
 KIKUYU: is a Bantu language spoken in Kenya.
 AMHARIC: is the official language in Ethiopia.
 SOMALI: is the Cushitic language of Somalia.
 QUECHUA: in Bolivia, language of the Incas.
 TOBA or COM L'EC: at Pampa Aguara, north of Saenz Peña. Spoken in Argentina, Paraguay and Bolivia.
 * PHILIPPINE MINOR LANGUAGES:
 10: GADDANG language in barrio Butigui, Mountain Prov.
 14: ILONGOT or BUGKALUT in Kakidugen.
 23: KALLAHAN or A(N)TIPOLO IFUGAO, in Keleyiq, in Napayo barrio.
 34: SAMAL in Sisangat & Siganggang, Siasi Municipality.
 40: TAGABILI language.
 42: TAGBANWA, KALAMIAN language in Coron Island.
 5 and 6: BILAAN in Koronadal and Sarangani.
 7 and 32: BINUKID and MANOBO in Western Bukidnon.

GENERAL NOTES - HOW TO USE THIS DICTIONARY

YOU CAN FIND THE SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATIONS OF THE WORDS LISTED, IN 115 OTHER LANGUAGES. FOR THEIR GEOGRAPHICAL LOCATIONS PLEASE REFER TO PAGE 3.

THIS IS A SIMPLIFIED DICTIONARY WHERE THE COMPARISON OF WORDS IN DIFFERENT LANGUAGES IS ESSENTIAL. PART OF THIS COLLATING TAKES PLACE BY THE OPTICAL MECHANISM OF THE HUMAN EYE. THEREFORE, OUR DICTIONARY DOES NOT WANT TO CONFUSE THE READER'S EYES BY USING STRANGE MARKS OR LETTERS IN CERTAIN LANGUAGES. ONE CAN ALWAYS REFER TO MORE DETAILED DICTIONARIES, COMPLETE WITH ACCENT MARKS OR SYMBOLS THAT INDICATE THE VOCAL QUALITY TO BE GIVEN TO A PARTICULAR LETTER.

MARKS OF PUNCTUATION: A COMMA (,) OR A SEMICOLON (;) AFTER THE LAST WORD IN THE MAIN CHAPTER (PAGES 4-281) INDICATES THAT THERE ARE MORE WORDS LISTED FOR IT IN THE "ADDENDA TO THE DICTIONARY" (PAGES 282-329). THESE OVERFLOWING WORDS, AS THE WHOLE DICTIONARY, MAY INCLUDE VERSIONS OF THE WORD IN DIFFERENT DIALECTS. SEMICOLONS (;) CAN ALSO SEPARATE TWO NOTIONS FROM EACH OTHER THAT ARE MORE OR LESS RELATED. (FOR EXAMPLE: SPIDER AND SPIDERWEB)

OTHER SYMBOLS: PARENTHESES ( ) CAN MARK A LESS IMPORTANT, OFTEN NEGLIGIBLE PART OF THE WORD(S). FULL EXPRESSIONS WITHIN PARENTHESES MAY CALL THE READERS' ATTENTION FOR THE UNCERTAINTY OF THE FOREIGN WORD(S)' MEANING, OR THAT OF OUR SOURCES. SOMETIMES THEY REFER TO THE POSSIBLE CLOSEST NOTION IN THAT CULTURE. SOME INTERESTING EXPLANATIONS OR NOTES ARE SHOWN IN BRACKETS [ ]. THE ASTERISKS (*) REFER TO FURTHER NOTES IN THE ADDENDA (PAGES 282-329). A NUMBER ACCOMPANIED BY AN ASTERISK REFERS TO A MINOR PHILIPPINE LANGUAGE THAT IS LISTED AND EXPLAINED ON PAGE 3.
